

A Conscious and Weakly Conscious in the Social Representations of Young People of Conscience

LILIYA SH. MUSTAFINA

Institute of Psychology Russian Academy of Science
13, Yaroslavskaya str., Moscow, 129366, Russia
E-mail: leila.mus@gmail.com

Research focuses on studying social representations of students about conscience. The use of two complementary research methods of social representations reveals both conscious and rational opinions about the young people of conscience and poorly conscious meanings and associations connected with the phenomenon of conscience. The results showed that the core of representations of young people of conscience has a positively stained category as a conscious and the conscious in weak form. However, in weakly conscious representations of conscience are more frequently observed elements with negative emotional overtones.

Keywords: conscience, the core and the periphery of social representations, youth.